JKLM Energy Joins Leading National Organization Focused on Environmental Performance, Emissions Reductions

POTTER COUNTY, Pa. – As a part of our commitment to protecting and improving our environment, JKLM Energy, LLC (JKLM) is proud to announce it will be joining The Environmental Partnership.

Launched in 2017, the voluntary initiative brings together natural gas and oil companies that are committed to improving environmental performance in the development of America’s energy resources.

“JKLM Energy is deeply committed to ensuring our environment is protected and improved as we safely develop clean-burning American natural gas,” said Terrence Pegula, founder and CEO of JKLM Energy. “Sharing best practices and other operational information is critical to our industry’s success, and engaging with The Environmental Partnership is yet another way for us to heighten our environmental performance, especially as it relates to air quality.”

The partnership is based on the principles of taking action, learning and collaborating. Participating companies have agreed to share scientific information, innovations and best practices.

Though the United States leads the world in greenhouse gas reductions, much due to increased use of natural gas, the first initiative of the partnership is focused on further reducing air emissions, including methane and volatile organic compounds. Currently, air quality is the cleanest in the modern era with the EPA reporting total emissions of six criteria air pollutants have declined 73 percent since 1970. The Environmental Partnership is building on this success. Participants, including JKLM, will focus on implementing solutions that are technically feasible, commercially proven and result in significant emissions reductions.
